Summary

- In the unfavourable sentiment that prevailed in Europe on the last trading day of the week, major benchmarks closed mixed.
- Despite the failure to reach agreement on the US budget and the beginning of the automatic spending cuts, American markets achieved modest gains on Friday.
- The American ISM manufacturing index hit ten-month high in February.

The last trading day of the week saw unenthusiastic investors across Europe. The weaker-than-expected Chinese manufacturing data and the eurozone's anaemic industrial statistics have weighed on key indices. The afternoon's mixed bag of US macroeconomic data did not set a clear direction for European trading either. The uncertainty at the heels of the Italian elections also diminished appetite to buy. Europe's key indices ended Friday's trading with mixed results: the Footsie added 0.3%, while the DAX slipped 0.4% and the CAC40 dropped 0.6%. Deutsche Bank lost almost 5% on news that Goldman Sachs lowered its recommendation on the German bank's stocks.

American indices started Friday's trading in various directions, but ultimately managed to climb into the positive territory despite the failure to agree on the USA's budget and the automatic spending cuts' taking effect. Of the S&P sector indices, the health care sub-index made the strongest gain (+0.76%), whereas the industrial sub-index was the worst performer (-0.17%). In corporate news, Groupon and Visa made headlines on Friday. Groupon dismissed its CEO a day after publishing a quarterly report that slashed its stock price by 20% on Friday. Visa entered into global agreement with Samsung to promote the latter's mobile wallet application – some of the mobile telephone manufacturing giant's contactless devices will be equipped with the Visa PayWave application installed.

In Asian trading, there was negative investment mood this morning, and the key indices closed mixed. The weakest link was China's Shanghai Composite, with 4% drop. The underlying reason for this fall is a report on levying 20 per cent tax on existing Chinese home sales.

As the Senate failed to reach agreement by 28 February, the sequester took effect on Monday 1 March, potentially curbing the USA's spending by USD 85 billion in 2013. Over the past two years, the American president and the Republicans of Congress agreed to reduce the deficit by a total of USD 3.6 trillion in ten years, mostly through frugality. Most of the spending cut measures that kicked in on Friday will not take immediate effect – they are implemented stage by stage until 30 September. The budget cuts put into practise on 1 March do not affect the pensions paid by social security services, Medicaid or food stamp programmes, which support the poorest. More than half of the forced savings will be taken away from the Pentagon. Holding back budget items is likely to decelerate the American economy's growth by 0.5 percentage points in 2013 and to result in losing 750,000 jobs, President Obama opined.

The February reading of the ISM institute's manufacturing index has hit ten-month high, signifying further improvement in the US manufacturing industry's outlook. The ISM index grew to 54.2 points in the last month of winter, the highest gauge since April 2012 (against the forecast of 52.5 points). A breakdown of data reveals that respondents have become far more positive about sales outlook, while the assessment of labour market prospects has deteriorated.
