Summary

- The bailout package for Cyprus, which includes the taxation of bank deposits, ruled Monday's trading: stock markets were down, the dollar firmed and the price of gold increased.
- Today the parliament in Cyprus is to vote on the specifics of the bailout. Last night the eurozone finance ministers recommended making deposits of less than EUR 100,000 exempt from the new levy, but the upper rate can exceed 15%.

News related to Cyprus has determined Monday's trading. Investors in Western Europe and chiefly in South Europe were spooked that the government was planning to raise nearly EUR 6 billion of the country's EUR 17-18 billion bailout package by imposing tiered tax on bank deposits. Analysts opine that this could establish precedent for other troubled countries of Southern Europe. All major stock indices were heading down, but this morning the sentiment has somewhat eased (that said, the key indices opened in the red today), as last night the eurozone's finance ministers promised more freedom for Cyprus in resolving this issue, if it does not impose the tax on bank deposits under EUR 100,000. Monday was public holiday in Cyprus, and today the parliament will debate the fine points of the bailout package. Banks will reopen on Thursday.

Although the negative sentiment spread onto US stock markets, Apple and HP were strong performers yesterday. Bond yields on the eurozone periphery have increased; the dollar's appreciation led the EUR/USD to a three-month low of less than 1.29. Gold's price exceeded 1,600 USD/ounce.

There was no important data release yesterday. Today the United Kingdom will publish February inflation data and the USA will release property market data. Analysts expect the latter to keep up the slow but steady improvement.

In more of today's publications, the ZEW business confidence index will see the light of day in Germany. Its reading, which may somewhat decline in March, mirrors analysts' opinion (as opposed to the Friday release of IFO index, which translates business leaders' assessments into one figure).
