Summary

- Domestic equities retreated yesterday while in Europe evolution was mixed; in the US, stocks ended higher following better than expected retail sales and jobless claims data
- The leu gained 0.5% to the euro yesterday in line with peer currencies; EUR/RON opened lower today
- The Government intends to open discussions for a new IMF deal (Reuters) as the current one expires at the end of June.

Domestic equities retreated yesterday and all indexes on BVB finished down. BET and BET composite lost 0.7% each. Equities' turnover continues to remain at relatively low levels (4.9 mn EUR yesterday). In Europe, we saw mixed evolution while in the US the finish was strong after retail sales and jobless claims data came out better than expected. The good results coming from US macroeconomic data raises worries about Fed pulling back on stimulus. This could in turn prompt US investors to retreat from emerging market bonds and invest in US safe heaven assets. Romanian equities are picking up on external signals as well but for the moment volumes are relatively low and investors are waiting for more external guidance.

The leu gained 0.5% to the euro yesterday in line with its peer currencies. EUR/RON opened lower this morning as well despite that the money market rates are easing already, ahead of the end of the maintenance period for the required reserves. Reuters reported that the government intends to open talks with the IMF regarding a new agreement. The news is RON positive, given the quiet recent period regarding this matter especially since the existing agreement is expiring at the end of June and risks coming from external markets have not vanished yet. The swings witnessed in the EURRON reinforced the currency's sensitivity to capital outflows from Romania. The IMF backing has made it easier for the Central Bank to send clear signals that it stands ready to intervene to support the leu.

In line with lower money market rates, government securities yields have declined on a daily basis but they are still higher by 23-36 bp on a weekly basis.
