Summary

- Amid the uncertainty in European trading on Friday, the key indices ended the week lower.
- The initial optimism persisted on US markets throughout Friday's session, helping benchmarks gain nearly 1%.
- In contrast with expectations, 195,000 jobs were created in the United States in June but unemployment rate stagnated at 7.6%.

After Thursday's rally, pessimism ruled Friday's trading in Europe. Seeing the afternoon's release of labour market data, benchmarks initially went up but then the better than expected statistics increased investors' worries that the Fed may soon scale back its asset purchase programme. All of Europe's key indices closed in the red: the Footsie dropped by 0.7%, the CAC40 retreated 1.5%, and the DAX lost 2.4%.

On Friday, Standard and Poor's cut Portugal's credit rating from the current stable to negative, implying that a downgrade may follow deeper into the non-investment grade. The rating agency' rationale cited the political crisis in Portugal.

US markets started the day with gains, and the optimism persisted throughout Friday's session. The S&P climbed 1%, the Nasdaq added 0.7%, and the Dow picked up 0.9%. Of the S&P's sector indices, advancing 1.8% made the financial sub-index the strongest performer. Industry (+1.6%) and healthcare (+1.3%) also fared well. Of the Dow's components, JP Morgan and American Express both rallied 2.3%.

On Friday night, Fitch downgraded Egypt's long-term foreign and local currency ratings by one notch, from B to B minus, leaving the outlook negative, implying that further downgrade may follow. The rating agency cited risks that political stability may considerably deteriorate as a result of the most recent political developments in Egypt.

This morning's trading brought losses to all major indices in Asia, suggesting that investors are increasingly fretful about China's slowing economy. The Shanghai Composite decreased by nearly 2%, the Hang Seng CE plunged more than 2.2%. In the face of the yen's further gains to the dollar, Japan's markets went down: the Nikkei slipped 1% and the TOPIX closed 1.3% lower.

The better-than-expected American job market data have further depreciated the euro to the dollar, the EUR/USD started Friday's trading at the 1.291 level, but it weakened to 1.283 by the evening. This morning, the EUR/USD started off from the 1.282 line.

In the USA, employment grew by 195,000 in June, more than the expected 165,000. Moreover, the April and the May data were revised significantly higher, to 199,000 (from 149,000) and to 199,000 (from 175,000) respectively. At this point, it is the service sector that is capable of creating a large number of jobs, more specifically, in the recreation services field, including hotels, restaurants and catering where 75,000 new jobs were added. Other services activities created 53,000 new jobs. The number of employees grew by 37,000 in the retail sector, by 20,000 in health care, and by 17,000 in the financial sector. Employment in manufacturing and construction has hardly changed since May, but the job cuts in the government sector went on (the number of civil servants decreased by 5,000).

In spite of the better-than-expected employment data, jobless rate stagnated at 7.6%, even though analysts' consensus expected it to decline. This can be put down to the contraction of the labour market' size; suggesting that an unexpectedly high number of workers have left the labour market.

After American markets close today, Alcoa will publish its Q2 quarterly results, marking the beginning of the corporate earnings report season in the USA. Analysts expect Alcoa to post USD 5.86 billion revenue and USD 0.06 earnings per share.
