Summary

- BET advanced by 0.41% yesterday, in line with international markets; Fondul Proprietatea and Transelectrica were among the few blue chips closing down yesterday
- The leu gained 0.3% to the euro yesterday, in line with its peers
- The Treasury successfully sold 500 mn RON in 3Y bonds at 4.74%.

As expected, European equities moved up yesterday and BET gained 0.41%. The only local index which took a hit yesterday was BET-FI, led down by Fondul Proprietatea which retreated by 0.86%. Fondul Proprietatea and Transelectrica were among the few blue chips closing down yesterday. Total equities' turnover stood at 4.9 mn EUR and deals represented almost 40% of the liquidity. Fed's message regarding the maintenance of the accommodative monetary policy for the moment has proven supportive for risky assets, as expected. However, the current stance looks like a swift change compared to what was announced earlier in June and the guidance for the next steps of Fed's monetary policy is blurred.

After trading around 4.43 almost the entire day, EUR/RON moved lower at the end of the local session. The leu and its peers gained 0.3%-0.7% yesterday (except for the Czech crown which was marginally up). Emerging market currencies gained in line with equities as investors betted again on riskier assets. Today, we will see the balance of payments data for May: we already know that the trade gap shrank further, but we look forward for the funding side of the current account as well, and especially the foreign direct investment statistics. Leu's appreciation is consistent with the lower current account deficit this year, but the large portfolio investments which are funding the existing deficit can induce a higher volatility in the currency.

International events provided a good background for yesterday's auction held by the Treasury: again, 500 mn RON of 3Y bonds (residual maturity) were successfully sold at 4.74%. This was 33 bp lower than the previous similar auction in Mid June and even lower than this week's results at the auction for 2Y bonds which had an average accepted yield of 4.79%. Demand was healthy, and bid to cover ratio remained high, at 4.449.

Government securities yields fell by 3-7 bp on a daily basis, in line with money market rates.
