Summary

- US stock markets started to rise on Wednesday afternoon; the Dow and the S&P 500 saw gains.
- The majority of respondent blames Republicans for the US political row, opinion polls found; therefore many see chances that the shutdown and the debt ceiling may be resolved in the near future.
- President Obama's nominee to chair the Fed, Janet Yellen said last night that strengthening economic recovery and boosting employment would be the priorities in the next cycle if she were actually appointed.

The Dow Jones and the S&P 500 index slightly advanced, while other US and European indices sank, except the Spanish benchmark.

US stock markets started to rise on Wednesday afternoon, on the back of news that the rift between Republicans and Democrats narrowed. President Obama invited parties to a common discussion about America's shutdown and raising its borrowing limit. The survey conducted jointly by Associated Press and Gfk may be a catalyst of these processes, as it found that Congress' approval rates is only 5% and more than six out of ten respondents blame the Republicans for the shutdown. According to the most recent reports, the Republicans consider agreeing to a slight increase in the debt ceiling, in order to buy time.

Janet Yellen, whom President Obama nominated to chair the Fed, said last night that firming economic recovery and boosting employment would be the priorities in the next cycle if she were actually appointed into the position.
