Summary

- Investors adopted a wait-and-see approach before the Fed's two-day meeting starts today.
- Apple reported better-than-expected figures, but its gross profit margin may contract further in Q4.
- Ahead of the interest rate decision in the USA, the dollar is slightly firming.

Ahead of the Fed Open Market Committee's two-day meeting that kicks off today, and partly before Apple's earnings report, investors adopted a wait-and-see approach, resulting in modest moves in Western Europe and in the USA. In Frankfurt, ThyssenKrupp became the loser of the day (-3.4%), and carmakers headed down too. In London, pharmaceuticals excelled, while the Intercontinental hotel chain and easyJet lost more than 2%.

Apple reported mixed Q3 results. Both revenues and earnings per share have beaten expectations, but its profit sank in year/year comparison, and the volume of the smartphones sold in September was close to the lower boundary of the forecasts. Investors were also disheartened by the fact that even though gross profit margin increased for the first time in five quarters, the management forecasts a decline in Q4 again. After the publication of the earnings report, the stock price fell 4% in after-hours trading, which later lessened to -1.2%.

Deutsche Bank's profit has practically vanished; the 94% YoY fall (the EUR 41 mn profit is less than a tenth of what analysts had expected) can be put down to the investment banking division's poor performance and the EUR 1 bn legal provisions owing to the investigations into the financial institution's operations. Back in July-September, UBS was in these shoes (weak performance of investment banking, coupled with provision for litigation charges), but the Swiss company's profit was able to top expectations. But the management issued profit warning for 2015, which slashed its share price by 6% this morning.

Ahead of the Fed's decision, the dollar is gaining ground against the euro, pushing the EUR/USD to 1.377 this morning. Asian markets moved mixed, and Western Europe opened optimistically.

In the USA, industrial output grew faster than expected in September. The year/year index reached 3.2%, mostly thanks to the car manufacturing industry's strong performance. On the other hand, existing home sales fell hugely. A string of macroeconomic data will be out today.
