Summary

- In Friday's uncertain investment mood, the key indices in Europe and America closed mixed.
- The US economy created 288,000 new jobs in April (more than the estimated 215,000); unemployment rate came down to 6.3%.
- The April reading of China's PMI signifies decelerating economic activity, HSBC published this morning.

Ending a day of wait-and-see approach, European markets markets closed mixed on Wednesday: the FTSE and the DAX climbed somewhat higher, while France's CAC40 made a modest loss. Europe's stock markets (except for London) were closed on 1 May but most of them resumed trading on Friday. The key benchmarks could not erase the morning's losses by the close: the CAC40 slipped 0.7%, and the DAX slipped 0.5% into the red on Friday. Meanwhile, the Footsie upped by 0.2%. A 8.2% rally made RBS the strongest performer in London, benefiting from the reassuring Q1 earnings figures. Citigroup's upgraded recommendation for Taylor Wimpey Plc and Redrow Plc. to Buy has sent these construction companies' stock price 3.1% and 4.7% higher respectively.

Fitch has improved the outlook on Slovenia's BBB+ country risk profile from Negative to Stable, citing the reduced risks of the banking sector, the improved prospects of accessing market funding, and the decline in external imbalances.

The trading week was not interrupted in the USA, where Labour Day is celebrated in September. In Wednesday's session, the US market waited to see what the Fed's decision holds and the benchmarks ended higher. But indices closed Thursday's trading mixed: the Dow and the Nasdaq edged lower, and the S&P stagnated. On Friday, investors waited to see April's labour market statistics. The better-than-expected data sent equity markets down, as the recent data confirmed the picture of an intensifying US economy. On the last trading day of the week, the Dow sank 0.3%, the S&P inched down 0.1%, and the Nasdaq dropped 0.2%. Of the S&P's indices, utilities was the weakest component, with 2% fall. Friday's strongest sub-index was commodities (+0.4%).

In this morning's unfavourable investment mood in Asia, the key indices closed 0.5-1.5% lower. The fragile sentiment did not benefit from the worse-than-expected purchasing manager index from China, which signifies slowing economic activity. Today Japan's and South Korea's markets are closed for Children's day, the former will not open on Tuesday.

The USA published a number of important macroeconomic publications in the second half of last week.

The Fed Open Market Committee met on Tuesday and Wednesday. The FOMC left the benchmark rate unchanged, and reduced the size of the asset purchase programme by further USD 10 billion.

The Chicago manufacturing purchasing managers index rose to a six-month high of 63.0 in April, more than the expected 56.7. The surprisingly good reading stemmed from the new orders and production components.

According to Wednesday's data release, the US economy expanded by 0.1% in the first quarter; missing analysts' 1.1% forecast. The poor growth data may be put down to the worst winter in years, as well as to the significant fall in business orders and construction expenditure.

On Friday, the US Department of Labour released smaller-than-expected unemployment rate, and better employment figure. The US economy created 288,000 new jobs in April (more than the expected 215,000), the best figure in two years. Meanwhile, unemployment rate sank to 6.3%, as opposed to the estimated 6.7%.
