Summary

- In Monday's helpful global investment sentiment, advanced economies' key indices mostly closed in the green.
- The EUR/USD remained stagnant at 1.37.
- The conflict between the USA and China may affect their economic relations.

In Monday's benign trading sentiment in the USA and Europe, all of America's stock markets climbed higher. Soaring more than 1%, Russell2000 took the top slot. In the S&P, the technology sector's performance was the strongest, and losing more than 1.5% made utilities the weakest constituent.

A conflict is developing between the USA and China as the US indicted five Chinese military officials with cyber espionage. China is suspected to have conducted a hacker attack against some US companies – including solar energy, metalwork and nuclear technology businesses – in order to gain technology and other information. This is the first time for the USA to file cyber espionage charges against foreign government officials. These developments may influence American-Chinese economic and other relations.

The EUR/USD moved sideways near the 1.37 mark yesterday; this morning the pair was seen stagnant around this level. The EUR/CHF did not change meaningfully yesterday; and the EUR/CHF stuck to the 1.223 mark.

All of Asia's key indices closed with gains. The SENSEX's 1% rise was the strongest growth, followed by the Hang Seng's 0.6% increase and the Nikkei's 0.5% move higher. The SSEC closed practically flat.

Russia's RTS surged 2.2%, to close at 1,290.
