Summary

- BET added 0.7% yesterday on large equities' turnover (EUR 20 mn) and driven by energy stocks ; deals made up to two thirds of liquidity; in Europe, major stock indexes finished mixed after another disappointing macro data release (June IFO); US macro moving data to be released today but expectations are down
- ROBOR ON jumped 124 bps as the new reserve started but liquidity conditions remain good and all rates are significantly below the base rate of 3.5%.

BET added 0.7% yesterday, strongly supported by energy stocks: Transelectrica and OMV Petrom climbed 3-4% yesterday, Nuclearelectrica moved higher 2.2% and Transgaz gained 1.4%. BET-NG, the index of the energy sector stocks appreciated the most on the day: +1.6%. Total equities' turnover was high at EUR 20mn and two thirds were made in the deals market. The largest deal size was made by 6 transactions with Romgaz, mounting to EUR 12 mn. In Europe, most stock indexes finished mixed, as macroeconomic data was not supportive again: after Monday's weaker than expected PMI data for June, the IFO (June) sentiment indicator released yesterday disappointing as well. The only bright macro news regarded US May home sales statistics which exceeded economists' expectations. Today, a batch of market moving US macro data will be released, but expectations are to the downside. Events that unveil in Iraq are keeping investors on their toes as well and geopolitical risks limit appetite.

As the new reserve period started, ROBOR ON inched up by 124 bps yesterday but longer maturities, 3M included marginally eased. Already, official data showed that ON deposits at the standing facility offered by NBR increased in May compared to April and excess liquidity persists, with all ROBOR rates significantly below the base rate of 3.5%. Considering the redemption calendar of government debt in Q3, we expect good liquidity conditions to persist and closely watch the monetary policy decision of 1st July.
