Summary

- This morning Greece submitted the list of planned reforms to the Eurogroup, which may answer today whether the plans are acceptable and thus the bailout could be extended by four months.
- Most indices in Europe made small gains, and their US peers closed almost flat.
- Today's testimony to Congress of Fed Chair Janet Yellen could be a good opportunity to give signal to markets about the Fed's future rate policy.

This morning Greece submitted the list of planned reforms to the Eurogroup, which may answer today whether it accepts the plans and extends the bailout by four months. The planned reforms may be sufficient, unofficially sources said.

Europe's indices closed largely with slight gains, and their US peers practically stagnated on Monday.

Asian markets ended mostly lower this morning.

The dollar's strengthening led the EUR/USD to 1.134; oil and gold price fell.

Fed Chair Janet Yellen testimony to Congress today could be a good occasion to signal the Fed's future rate policy to markets. The minutes of the January meeting suggested to many that the current rate level may persist longer than had been thought, but this is inconsistent with the expectations communicated by the Fed. If Yellen confirms the Fed's earlier position (which deemed the oil price shock's effect on inflation temporary, and labour market developments are positive), then the March statement may probably make no mention of permanently low interest rate environment, thus rates may be raised from June. Otherwise, the date of the first rate hike may be postponed until the second half of the year.
