Summary

- As it was anticipated by the market, the ECB left its key interest rate unchanged at 0.05% yesterday. The ECB is committed to the full implementation of QE, Mr. Draghi said.
- The EUR/RON climbed higher to 4.42 yesterday; its regional peers also depreciated compared to the euro.
- MM rates slipped again yesterday, with higher moves at the short end.
- The Treasury aims to hold an auction for selling RON 200 mn debt in 10Y bonds today.
- All of the BVB indices finished in the positive territory on nice turnover (RON 64 mn); BRD rallied more than 3%.

As expected, the Governing Council of the European Central Bank left its key interest rate unchanged at 0.05%. Nonetheless, President Mario Draghi also confirmed that the ECB would focus on the full implementation of its policy measures.

Similarly to the other currencies of the region, the RON lost ground against the EUR yesterday, hitting the 4.42 exchange rate level. Meanwhile, the EUR could strengthen compared to the US dollar, however it weakened to around 1.03 versus the CHF.

Money market rates sank further on Wednesday, especially at the short end, while government security yields practically stagnated.

Today, the Treasury plans to sell RON 200 mn in 9.9Y government securities.

Romania's equity markets registered moderate gains yesterday on quite good volumes (RON 64 mn). The BET-FI index achieved the highest advance (0.5%), but the BET also inched up 0.2%. Among the individual stocks of the main index, the BRD could add the most (3.3%), followed by the shares of OMW Petrom (1.1%), while the third place of the top list was occupied by FP (0.8%). In Europe, the key indices mostly closed in the green: the CAC40 increased nicely (0.7%), the FTSE gained 0.3%. On the other hand, the DAX remained practically flat. Rebounding oil prices sent US energy shares higher. At the end of the day, the most important US equity benchmarks finished with gains between 0.4% and 0.7%.
