Summary

- Europe's and America's major indices closed with losses on Friday.
- With nearly all the votes counted, Syriza appears to have won Sunday's early elections in Greece.
- Moody's Investors Service downgraded France's debt rating on Friday.

Friday's trading sentiment was rather gloomy on most markets of Western Europe. Apparently, investors were not carried away by the Fed's leaving the interest rate unchanged on Thursday. First, the Fed's chair said the tightening would begin before the end of this year. Second, US central bankers postponed raising the Fed Fund Rate this time because of the global financial downturn's effects on US economy. Indices were dragged down by the ailing of automotive industry across Europe. All of Germany's car manufacturers reversed more than 3%; no wonder that the DAX also slid 3%. The Footsie lost 1.3% and France's CAC40 plunged 2.6%.

On Friday Moody's Investors Service downgraded France's government bond rating by one notch, from Aa1 to Aa2, and changed the outlook to stable; it cited the country's anaemic growth prospects. France's current rating by Moody's methodology is two notches below the best grade (Aaa), yet it signifies first-class and relatively low debt risk.

Sellers took the upper hand on the Wall Street on Friday as investors' fears about the slowing global markets re-intensified and were bolstered by the Fed's Thursday message. The Dow shed 1.8%, the S&P slipped 1.6%, and the Nasdaq100 dropped 1.4% on Friday. All of the S&P's sector indices closed in the red. The weakest sub-index, energy fell 2.6%; industry and basic materials plummeted more than 2% too. Within the Dow, banking shares had a bad day on Friday. Goldman Sachs contracted by 3%. JP Morgan fell 2.7%, Citigroup declined by 2.6%, and Wells Fargo shrank 2.2%.

Syriza appears to be the winner of Sunday's snap elections in Greece, winning 35.4% of the votes. The New Democracy party got 28.09%, and Golden Dawn party received 7% of the votes. Five more parties made it to parliament, two in electoral alliance; the right-wing brings the lowest amount votes (3.6%). To gain absolute majority in the 300-strong parliament, at least 151 mandates must be won. The old coalition partners Syriza and ANEL, which have started to form government again, will have 155 MPs altogether, including 145 in Syriza seats. New Democracy has 75. In the campaign, the new government pledged to adhere to the EU loan agreement. Back in January, the Syriza-ANEL coalition campaigned against austerity measures and struck a new rescue deal with global creditors in July.
