Summary

- Friday's gloom on emerged economies' equity markets was not improved by the agreeable GDP data from China, while the USA published worse-than-expected IP data.
- In Sunday's meeting in Doha oil exporting countries failed to reach agreement on freezing production levels.
- The Brent fell almost 5% by Monday morning; the RUB lost more than 2%.

Europe's equity markets ended the week in the red; the Stoxx600 dropped 0.4% on Friday. Most indices were dragged down by car manufacturers, the energy sector, and mining companies. Volkswagen's market share in Europe hit a five-year low in March, European Automobile Manufacturers' Association said on Friday; the news sent Volkswagen's stock price 2.4% lower. Daimler lost 2.1% on Friday, even though sales statistics pointed to a slight increase in its market share in March. On Friday the energy sector was dragged down by oil exporters' Sunday meeting in Doha, where the pessimistic expectations materialized. Meanwhile, commodity producers fell in sync with the dropping price of industrial metals. In Western Europe, Athens' benchmark was the top performer (+4.9%) as the ECB picked some bonds of Piraeus Bank as eligible for its asset purchase programme. Accordingly, Piraeus Bank's stocks sky-rocketed 27% in Friday's session. Carrefour gained 3.8%, owing to the cheering earnings report; the French retail chain offset the revenue lost in China by the dynamic surge in South Europe and Latin America.

US markets barely moved in Friday's trading; the S&P500 and the Dow inched down, the tech-heavy NASDAQ100 edged nearly 0.3% lower, while the small-cap Russell climbed 0.2% higher. The energy sector was hit the hardest; second to it was the financial sector; their combined losses were not counterbalanced by the growth of the real estate and consumption sectors, within the S&P. One of the biggest losers of the tech sector was Apple, following media reports that the smaller-than-expected sales of iPhone 6 and 6S Plus makes the manufacturer reduce its orders, dragging down the supplier chipmakers' stocks as well. Statistics on larger-than-expected shrinking of industrial production in March did not help the sentiment, and neither did the data on manufacturing output which showed slower-than-forecast increase last month. On the corporate front, Hasbro, IBM, Netflix and PepsiCo will publish their earnings reports today.

Asia's stock markets opened with losses and failed to remain in positive territory, except for the Shanghai index. The Nikkei fell 3.4%.

Sunday's meeting of OPEC and non-member states ended without any agreement on capping oil production. Saudi Arabia would have accepted production freeze only if all important producers participate, but that was not an option because of Iran's absence. Having re-appeared after the international sanctions were released in January, Iran is not willing to cut production until its output reaches pre-sanction level, therefore it did not go to the meeting. As expected by market experts, oil prices dropped after the summit. The Brent plunged almost 5% from Friday but it is still above 40 USD/barrel

Friday's release of US statistics on industrial production in March was short of expectations, dropping 0.6% month/month, and falling 2% year/year. Likewise, manufacturing production failed grow as expected, rising by only 0.4% in March from the previous year, which is a considerable slowing compared to the 0.8% increase in February. However, the New York Fed manufacturing index has surpassed expectations, jumping to near 10 points, while analysts forecast stagnation. But the consumer sentiment index seems to be deteriorating in April; according to the preliminary data, the first reading of the University of Michigan's consumer sentiment index sank to 89.7, down from 91 in March.

Housing market statistics are due out in the USA today.
