Summary

- The ECB left its monetary conditions unchanged; President Mario Draghi dampened expectations relating to the end of the asset purchase programme.
- The EUR/USD sank to levels last seen at the beginning of 2016.
- Crude oil prices nudged lower.

The ECB did not change its monetary policy in Thursday's meeting but President Mario Draghi pointed out that the idea of scheduling the end of the asset purchase programme had not come up. Besides, he reiterated that the purchases would be maintained until March 2017 – or beyond, if necessary. After the press conference, Europe's stock markets ground higher and the euro weakened.

In the United States, equity markets trickled down despite American Express's 10.4% rally owing to a cheering quarterly report (with USD 1.2 earnings per share, beating the forecast of 0.97 USD). Investors may have been unnerved by the looming interest rate hike yesterday. This morning Asia's markets opened with slight gains. There was no trading in Hong Kong.

After Mario Draghi's words, the EUR/USD made a brief visit below 1.09. This morning the pair is moving sideways, hugging its lowest level since February 2016.

Crude oil price has slipped; it seems to be sinking towards USD 50 again.

Retail sales in the UK missed expectations in September, but the August figure was revised higher. In the USA, the September figure of existing home sales was rosier than had been thought.

The eurozone's October consumer confidence index, which analysts expect to be flat, will see the light of day today.
