Summary

- In January, new building permits went up by 9.2% YoY.
- The EUR/RON climbed slightly above 4.52, rising around 0.2% on daily basis.
- Amid mixed global trading sentiment, the BET dropped 0.5% yesterday.

In January, the number of new licenses for residential buildings increased by 9.2% YoY, following December's 12.3% drop. It may be also worth mentioning that based on planned built area, permits surged 33.7% YoY, suggesting that the outlook for the residential segment of the construction sector is quite bright in this year, after uncertainties around the regulatory environment (caused mainly by the debt-to-asset law and concerns on loan conversions) eased as well.

Today the NBR will publish FX reserves data for February.

Global financial markets pointed to mixed evolutions on Tuesday, after many investors sat on the sidelines, preparing to hear the speech of US President Donald Trump. Market participants were curious, looking for hints about the President's fiscal stimulus plans. Meanwhile, the EUR/RON climbed around 0.2% higher, finishing the session slightly above 4.52. At the same time, the leu lost a bit more against the US dollar, as the EUR/USD dipped slightly lower yesterday.

Interbank lending rates and government securities' yields were little changed on Tuesday.

In the mixed sentiment, the BVB indices underperformed their key European peers, with the BET giving back 0.5%. Nevertheless, there were a few stocks among the BET components, which were able to end the day in green zone. Accordingly, Romgaz rallied 1.6% and the shares of Electrica also added 0.7%. The weakest performance was showed by OMW Petrom, pointing to a 1.8% loss. On the other side of the Atlantic, US equity benchmarks shrank 0.1-0.6%.
