Global Daily Report

Summary

- The sentiment was rather mixed in Friday's trading
- Donald Trump's health care bill failed; the President will try to pass tax reforms
- Oil empires may agree to new output cuts in May

Friday's trading was rather heterogeneous on global stock markets. In Europe, the DAX upped 0.2%, while the CAC40 shed 0.2%, and the FTSE100 dipped 0.1%. In America, the S&P500 inched 0.1% lower, while the NASDAQ100 eked out 0.2% gain. This morning Asia's stock exchanges ended with mixed results; the Nikkei grew by 0.9% but the SSEC descended 0.2%

In Friday's trading the USD lost 0.1% versus the EUR but gained 0.4% against the JPY.

President Trump's health care reform, meant to replace Obamacare, failed on Friday. All Democratic representatives voted against the bill, but Republicans were not unified in supporting the bill that would have terminated or reduced the health insurance of 25 million, mostly elderly or disabled people. The failure of this reform is significant for President Trump's programme because the savings on health care spending would have covered the expenses of the promised tax cuts. President Trump has already indicated that he would like to have the tax package approved by autumn, but the failure of the health care reform will either bring painful concessions to the tax package or the plan will substantially widen the budget gap.

Similarly to precious metals, crude price crept slightly higher in Friday's session. The world's leading oil producers met in Kuwait in Sunday, and reportedly OPEC members may propose new production cuts in May. Back in December, OPEC and some non-OPEC member states agreed to curb production by 1.8 million barrel/day. But there have been reports suggesting that this agreement is not fully observed. According to Kuwait's oil minister, if participating countries fully keep to this agreement, oil supply and demand may become balanced by the third quarter.
