Summary

- Stock markets headed higher on Friday and Monday
- Emmanuel Macron's party won solid majority in France
- On Friday the USD weakened, government securities' yields fell; on Monday two Fed officials make speeches
- · Brexit talks have begun

On Friday most stock markets made gains, the NASDAQ was the only major index to wobble. On Monday morning trading started on good footing: following Asia's gains, Europe also opened higher. The Paris stock exchange was among the brightest ones on Monday, as in the second round of the weekend's French elections Emmanuel Macron' party gained convincing majority (even though it won less mandates than had been expected), thus the likelihood of the economic reforms promised by the president has increased.

Crude prices went up on Friday and Monday. Agricultural commodity prices are rising on the back of reports on US weather. Wheat price jumped on Friday, and soy price leapt this morning.

On Friday the USD weakened, and US government securities' yields slipped. The US housing market data released on Friday were short of expectations, which may raise doubts about US growth and the future of the interest rate path. On Friday Russia's central bank raised its policy rate by 25 bp. The decision triggered an immediate RUB strengthening, but the trend reversed on Monday. Elsewhere, the Brexit talks between the European Union and the United Kingdom begin today; the GBP was seen firming this morning.

Geopolitical tensions have intensified during the weekend. There was a terror attack near a mosque in London. A US warplane shot down a Syrian jet for the first time, the fighter jet supposedly bombed opposition forces. Iran launched a missile strike against Syrian targets, to retaliate last week's attacks in Tehran.

In the absence of important macroeconomic statistics, markets are likely to watching two Fed officials' (Charles Evans, William Dudley) speeches. As the recent weeks' US macroeconomic data made the markets less certain about further interest rate hikes, their messages may be of particular interest.
