Global Daily Report

Summary

- Stock markets posted slight gains on Wednesday
- Oil prices marched higher
- The Fed is to reduce its balance sheet from October; odds of a December rate hike have risen

With investors sitting on the fence ahead of the Fed's decision, stock markets made subtle moves on Wednesday. Most of the key indices edged higher – the Dow and the S&P went to record highs. The financial sector outperformed, while technology names were the weakest ones. Apple's share price shrank as the IT giant admitted there were Wi-Fi connectivity issues with its new Apple Watch.

Oil prices ground higher as Iraq's oil minister said OPEC was ready to extend the production quotas that expire in March, and to further limit output.

As expected, the Federal Reserve left its interest rates unchanged, and announced to shrink its portfolio of government bonds and other securities by USD 10 billion per month, starting from October. The decision triggered an immediate 1% USD appreciation, and a rate hike in December has become more probable: 12 out of the Fed's 16 decision-makers expect rate increase, the 'dot plot' (members' interest rate forecasts) indicates. US ten-year yield has hit highs last seen in July.

Wednesday's release of US home price indicators was rather disappointing. Existing home sales fell for the third month in a row, causing a surprise on the downside. Moreover, the number of mortgage loan applications also dropped. In the UK, retails sales have topped expectations by a large margin, and the statistical service revised up the previous month's reading. Accordingly, the pound appreciated.

Earlier this morning, the Bank of Japan left its base rate on hold, as expected, and neither did it change its 0% target for 10Y government bonds. Thursday's important releases include sentiment indices from Europe and America, as well as a base rate decision in Norway, which is expected to remain on hold. Forward-rate agreements suggest that Europe's indices are likely to open with slight losses this morning.
