Summary

- The ROBOR 3M finished last week at 1.58%; in the light of rallying interest rates, the NBR's policy meeting planned for Tuesday is set to be the main event of the week.
- Romania's unemployment rate fell to 5.1% in August.
- Tourists' overnight stays grew by 3.8% YoY.
- The leu slightly firmed against the euro.

On Friday, interbank lending rates continued to surge, with the ROBOR 3M, the key reference rate for the majority of leu credits with variable interest rates, marking another multi-year high at 1.58%. As we noted in our earlier daily reports, fundamentals, first of all the reviving consumer price inflation, pave the way for an upward trajectory in the case of ROBOR rates in the medium- and long term. However, in the past few weeks, the sudden fall in the banking sector's excess liquidity also played a crucial role in the rally of ROBOR rates. Liquidity conditions may improve somewhat in the following period, given the expected year-end payments from the government budget.

In the light of soaring ROBOR rates, the monetary policy meeting of the NBR together with the press conference of Mr Isarescu, both planned for Tuesday, may get special attention.

In August, Romania's unemployment rate dipped 0.1 percentage point to 5.1%, the NIS said this morning. A year earlier, the jobless rate stood at 5.7%.

The number of tourists' overnight stays increased by 3.8% YoY, a report of Romania's statistical office revealed. This growth rate corresponds to a deceleration, as overnight stays grew by a faster rate (6.7% YoY) in July.

Today the NBR will publish FX reserve data for September.

Favourable mood characterised Friday's trading session on global financial markets, with the main equity indices in the USA as well as in Western Europe ending the day in green. Despite the global optimism, Bucharest's BET fell 0.7%. Meanwhile, the leu firmed modestly against the common European currency. This morning, the euro lost some ground against the greenback, after the Catalan referendum.
