Global Daily Report

Summary

- Europe's stock markets were rather reserved on Monday, the CEE region was more optimistic.
- America's benchmark indices hit new highs, driven by M&A news.

Most indices in Western Europe closed in negative territory, or at near-zero levels yesterday. The Stoxx600 edged 0.1% higher, while the DAX inched down 0.1%, despite the better-than-expected German factory goods orders data. The Stoxx600's banks index shed 0.4%, and Société Générale's nose-dive continued. Investors, disappointed by the bank's earnings figures, continued to sell its shares, which extended Friday's 4% fall by 3.7% on Monday. Italy's big banks also closed in the red, as did Spain's leading financial institutions: Banco Santander sank 1.2%. There are early indications that Spain's economy is adversely affected by the political uncertainty caused by Catalonia's declaration of independence: the services PMI (purchasing managers' index) deteriorated in October, and consumer confidence subsided. On Monday the IBEX lost 0.4%.

Amid the buoyant session in the CEE region, the BUX advanced 0.9%, the WIX added 0.8%, and the PX upped 0.4%.

Monday's trading session ended with slight gains in the USA, where the Dow climbed 4 bps, and the S&P nudged 0.1% higher. The NASDAQ Composite and NASDAQ100 gained 0.3% each; these three indices broke new records. The energy and the real property sectors were the strongest ones, while consumer staples and base material companies were the losers of the day. Telephone service providers were also among the losers after merger talks between Sprint and T-Mobile US failed. The share prices of Sprint nose-dived 12% and T-Mobile plunged 6%, dragging down Verizon (-4.0%) and AT&T (1.3%) too. Broadcom, the chip manufacturer, announced to buy its rival Qualcomm – the news sent the two manufacturers' share prices 1.4% and 1.2% higher, respectively. On the back the better-than-expected quarterly results, Michael Kors' share price soared 15% yesterday. The quarterly earnings figures of Coca-Cola and Snap will be out in the USA today; in Germany, BMW will publish its quarterly result.

This morning most of Asia's stock indices closed higher, except South Korea. After hitting 21-year record high on Monday, the Nikkei continued its dynamic growth; it closed 1.7% higher this morning, at a level unseen since 1992, mainly benefiting electronic and machinery companies' gains. A number of companies published their reports today. One of them, Toyota posted better-than-expected profit figure, yet it crept only 0.2% higher.

Oil prices rose further on Monday: the Brent surged 3.5%, to exceed 64 USD/barrel, while WTI advanced 3.0%, to a level last seen in June 2015. Gold price grew 0.9% and copper increased by 1.4%. The USD's ailing continued, causing a noticeable change in the USD/GBP (0.7%) and the USD/JPY (0.3%).

The September reading of German factory goods orders, released yesterday, surprised on the upside: instead of contracting more than 1% as forecast, the seasonally adjusted month/month gauge signified 1% growth, while the August figure was revised higher (from 3.5% to 4.1%). In year/year comparison, demand expanded by 9.5%. Moreover, investor confidence indicators also suggest that manufacturing is likely to expand further. Today industrial production statistics, as well as construction PMI data will see the light of day in Germany.
