Global Daily Report

Summary

- Europe's key stock markets closed mixed yesterday.
- US indices ended Tuesday's trading in the red.
- Crude oil futures fell yesterday

Europe's key indices posted mixed results on Tuesday. Preserving some of the morning's gains, Germany's DAX rose by 0.4%, as investors shrugged off reports that coalition talks might collapse. In contrast, Britain's FTSE100 slipped 0.2% by the end of the day; the EU will insist on stricter-than-expected terms for leaving the block, according to the documents leaked out from Brexit negotiations.

Despite opening on a strong note, America's leading indices headed down yesterday. Within the S&P, base materials and energy sectors saw the sharpest fall; the latter dropped in sync with oil prices. Likewise, GE (-3%) was the Dow's weakest name yesterday but it was also dragged down by CNBC's info that it is set to be split up. Meanwhile Merck&Co closed 5.8% higher, after announcing a major advance in treating lung cancer. Citigroup's quarterly earnings figures have beaten analysts' estimates, and helped its share price climb higher.

After closing at all-time high yesterday, the Hang Seng edged down, as did Japan's Nikkei225. Mainland China's Shanghai Composite upped 0.2%.

On currency markets, the USD/JPY and the EUR/USD barely changed.

The Brent slipped more than 1%. The most important industrial metal prices changed little, with nickel booking the strongest loss (-2.6%).

Cryptocurrencies had a bad day yesterday as word on the possibility of tighter regulation pushed their prices much deeper. Bitcoin, the most important crypto currency and Ethereum nose-dived 20%, and Ripple plummeted more than 30% yesterday.

Today the USA will release industrial production statistics for December, and the Fed Beige Book will be worth keeping an eye on.
