Global Daily Report

Summary

- Europe's stock markets picked up but their US peers dropped at the end of Wednesday's trading
- The US 10Y auction yield hit four-year high; the US dollar strengthened yesterday
- Commodity prices fell
- Political risks abated: Germany's grand coalition is taking shape; US Senate approved the federal budget.

Europe's stock markets closed higher on Wednesday, ending more than one week of losing streak. The Stoxx 600 index advanced 2%. The financial sector excelled yesterday, with banking shares surging 3.4%.

US markets opened on a strong note, before a number of reports soured the sentiment, dragging down the top three indices into the red. On the one hand, crude oil prices slid 2% owing to a surprise jump in America's oil inventories last week. On the other hand, the yield at the auction of 10Y US Treasury note hit its four-year high of 2.84%. The Chicago Fed president Charles Evans said that a persistent rise in inflation would necessitate more interest rate hikes than currently thought.

Most of Asia's stock markets closed with gains this morning.

The 10Y German Bund yield also rose, by 5 basis points. The US dollar's appreciation sent the EUR/USD to its two-week low. The resurgent greenback, and the undecided stock markets, weighed on commodity prices: copper contracted by 2.8%, and gold lost some of its glitter.

The New York Fed's president William Dudley called for a better understanding of the risks surrounding the derivative products that bet on market volatility, and the financial stability risks posed by cryptocurrencies. A Bloomberg survey estimates the trading positions that are based on volatility at USD 2,000 billion, and a growing number of analyses blame them for the recent days' sudden plunge on stock markets. America's watchdogs on Tuesday called for stronger supervision of cryptocurrencies, but they did not propose any regulation that would impede them – this brought relief to the crypto markets, and bitcoin's price exceeded USD 8,000 again.

Germany's coalition talks between the CDU/CSU and the SPD parties are reported to be bearing fruit, opening the door for a new German government. Chancellor Angela Merkel and prospective foreign minister Martin Schulz indicated that the coalition agreement may have a great impact on the EU's future. Germany is willing to pay more into the common budget but in return it would prefer a single minimum corporate tax rate and tax base system in the EU.

America's Senate approved the amendments to the budget, which ensures funding for the seamless operation of the US administration. The bill hinges on approval from the House of Representatives, by Thursday midnight the latest.

For the second time this year, Romania's central bank raised the base rate, to 2.25% as inflation had accelerated to 3.3% in December, nearing the upper bound of its 1.5-3.5% tolerance band. Poland's central bank left its policy rate unchanged; while that of Brazil cut its benchmark rate to its lowest on record, 6.75%. The Central Bank of Russia is to make decision on Friday; Wednesday's publication of January inflation data undershot expectations, and the 2.2% rate marks an all-time low, and is a far cry from the 4% target.

China's foreign trade data were surprisingly strong; its imports grew by a massive 37% rate. The smaller-than-expected trade surplus weakened its currency, the yuan (CNY).

Today's macroeconomic calendar is rather thin. The Bank of England's rate decision is expected to leave interest rates on hold.
