Summary

- Jerome Powell's words suggested that the US monetary tightening may end sooner than expected.
- This message weakened the USD. America's stock indices rallied 2%, driven by the tech sector's march
- A no-deal Brexit could severely hurt Britain's economic growth, the UK Treasury warned.
- Word on the rising US oil inventories pushed Brent below 60 USD/barrel.

Western Europe's key indices made but slight moves on Wednesday. Picking up after Tuesday's fall, some carmakers eked out small gains on Wednesday, but most of them were under pressure, and so were their suppliers. Previously, the information in German media that the plan to impose 25% tariff from next week on cars imported to America is already on Donald Trump's desk caught Europe's car industry off guard on Tuesday.

The Bank of England strongly warned the UK against a no-deal Brexit. Britain's disorderly withdrawal would reduce the country's GDP by 8% in the first quarter of 2019. The UK Treasury also released its research on the potential impacts of Brexit – a no-deal divorce could deliver a 9.3% hit to the UK economy on a 15-year horizon, while an orderly withdrawal would lower economic output by an estimated 3.9%. The 11 December vote in the House of Commons will be preceded by a four-day on Brexit debate.

Stock markets shot up and the US dollar weakened after Jerome Powell's speech. He said that current interest rates were just below the equilibrium level. The Fed chairman's message made investors think that, in line with expectations, the December meeting would raise rates before monetary tightening slows down, or even halts, next year. The most important indices on Wall Street advanced more than 2%; the Nasdaq100 surged 3.2%. All sectors, except utilities, closed with gains yesterday, with technology outshining others. The statistics released yesterday indicate further contraction in US new home sales.

In the CEE region's stock markets, Poland's WIG20 excelled with 1.9% gain, while the BUX inched trivially higher.

The dollar's weakening raised the EUR/USD by 0.7%, to 1.14, and the USD/JPY by 0.1%, to 113.7. The GBP wiped out all the morning's gains, thus the EUR/GBP closed flat.

In the USA, the EIA reported stronger-than-expected growth in oil inventories, which triggered a new falling wave in crude prices. Brent and WTI slid below 59 USD/barrel and USD 50 respectively.

This morning Asia's key indices closed mixed. The yen extended yesterday's gains against the dollar.

The eurozone will publish the November reading of the European Commission's economic sentiment index; analysts expect continued fall. Elsewhere, the US pending home sales data is worth checking, particularly because the new home sales figures published on Wednesday indicated contraction, compared with the September figure. The minutes of the latest FOMC meeting are also due out today.

Investments in financial instruments carry a certain degree of risk, which may affect the effectiveness of the investment decision, and investors may not receive the whole amount they expected the investment to yield in their investment targets; they may not preserve even the invested amount, therefore the invested capital might even decrease, be wholly lost, or even lead to additional payment obligation.
7. Trading with leveraged products (such as foreign exchange contracts) or with shares and indices that have underlying products carries a considerable amount of risk, and these products are not suitable for all investors. Trading with leveraged products carries the risk of losing all capital, and it may incur losses that exceed the amount invested.
8. The figures and information described herein refer to yields or changes in the past. Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future yields, changes, or performance. The changes on money and capital markets, the fluctuation of prices, the development of investments and their yields are influenced by the combined effect of multiple factors; one important factor of them is the change in investors' expectations. The development of prices, the future yield of financial assets, indices or indicators, the examination of their changes, trends, and future performance is based on estimations and forecasts, which forecasts do not allow reliable conclusions to be drawn about the future moves of prices, real future yields, changes, or performance. For each product and service, please assess their tax accounting implications, and other tax consequences, taking into account that they cannot be precisely assessed without knowing the effective tax regulations or the client's individual circumstances; and these legislative provisions as well as the circumstances may change over time.
