Summary

- Romania's government considers introducing a new progressive tax on banks' assets; the levy may be introduced starting from 1 January 2019.
- Contributors could have an option to withdraw early from the mandatory private pension system, the Ministry of Finance said yesterday.
- A new 3% turnover tax may be levied on energy companies; natural gas prices could be capped for years.
- Bucharest's BET index registered heavy losses this morning.

Romania's government considers introducing a new progressive tax on banks' assets, Finance Minister Mr Teodorovici said yesterday. The so-called 'tax on greed' will depend on the quarterly evolution of ROBOR 3M and ROBOR 6M interest rates. According to the plan, the levy would be 0.2% of bank assets, if the interbank lending rates reach the 1.5%-2.0% interval, 0.4% for ROBOR average of 2.0%-2.5%, 0.6% for ROBOR average of 2.5%-3.0% and 0.9% for ROBOR average of 3.0%-3.5%. Above the 3.5% interest rate threshold, the tax will rise by 0.3 percentage points when the ROBOR also rises by 0.5 ppts. Mr Teodorovici expects RON 3.6 bn (more than 0.3% of GDP) extra revenue for the state budget from the new tax. At the end of September 2018, commercial banks' total net assets stood at RON 445.2 bn, 9.5% higher than a year earlier.

In another draft bill the Finance Ministry revealed yesterday that Romanians could have the option to withdraw from the mandatory private pension fund, after contributing for five years. People who opt for this option have to pay an early withdrawal fee. Romanian pension funds cumulated assets worth around EUR 10 bn.

The government also plans to introduce a new 3% turnover tax on energy companies. In addition, the price of natural gas could be capped at RON 68 per MWh for the period of 1 January 2019 – 28 February 2022.

The government wants to further increase pension benefits and public wages as well as to keep the budget deficit at the 3% level next year, Finance Minister noted.

On the back of the planned fiscal measures, Bucharest's stock indices registered heavy losses this morning. Banking sector stocks fell more than 10%.
