Summary

- Optimism ruled Europe's stock markets on Tuesday.
- Donald Trump's Twitter post broke the impetus of the industrial sector.
- The USA will publish the latest inflation figures today.

As fears of a trade war with Mexico evaporated, investors' optimism returned; apparently they assume that the talks with China will be likewise successful. The expectation that the Fed's next meeting may lower interest rates was one more to argument for hitting the Buy button. Western Europe's key stock markets maintained the momentum until the close. However, Donald Trump's Twitter post soured the sentiment in the USA, making the Nasdaq100 the only US benchmark to close in positive territory.

The US President expressed concerns about the planned mega-merger of Raytheon and United Technologies, maintaining that this plan weakens his administration's bargaining power. In the aftermath of the announcement, investors hit industrial shares, making it the worst-performing sector in the S&P. President Trump raised a few eyebrows by threatening with additional tariff hikes on Chinese goods, unless Xi Jinping meets him at the G20 summit. Donald Trump also tweeted about the EUR/USD pair, finding the euro undervalued against the US dollar, which adversely affects the USA. The euro's trivial firming sent the EUR/USD to 1.13.

Crude oil prices sank, while the most important industrial metal prices closed higher at the end of the day.

Asia's key indices closed in the red this morning; in Hong Kong the Hang Seng slid 1.8%, in the worst performance. The yen opened on a strong note versus the US dollar.

Today the USA will release consumer price inflation (CPI) and core CPI figures.
