Summary

- Friday's trading was quite buoyant on the equity markets of America and Europe.
- The UK steps up measures for a no-deal Brexit.
- Emmanuel Macron has signed the digital tax bill into law.
- The USA published Q2 GDP data.

Friday's trading was fairly optimistic on America's stock markets: the S&P500 advanced 0.7%, and the Nasdaq100 surged 1.1%, both hitting new highs. The Dow climbed 0.2% higher. It was the favourable macroeconomic data and the positive earnings reports of firms like Google, Intel, McDonalds and Starbucks that helped markets march higher.

Europe's key stock indices closed in the red too. Britain's FTSE100 grew by 0.8%, France's CAC40 gained 0.6%, Germany's DAX added 0.5%, and the Pan-European Stoxx600 upped 0.3%. One of the biggest winners in the corporate world, Vodafone sky-rocketed 10.6%, benefiting from favourable earnings data. The losers of the day, Spain's Banco Sabadell and Caixabank, slid more than 6.5%, after lowering their profit guidance for 2019.

Britain's new government started preparations for a no deal Brexit, following Boris Johnson's announcement that the United Kingdom would leave the EU by all means on 31 October and the EU's indication that negotiations could not be re-opened. The new Chancellor of Exchequer, Sajid Javid is likely to announce this week the planned fiscal easing measures, to boost the economy. Meanwhile the opposition Labour Party's leader Jeremy Corbyn said the party would do everything it can to prevent no-deal Brexit.

France's President Emmanuel Macron has signed the digital tax bill into law. The act already passed by France's national assembly, will mostly affect tech companies like Google, Amazon, and Facebook. US President Donald Trump had already expressed disapproval about this plan, adding that in response, the USA may impose import tariff on French wine. The US chief trade representative, Robert Lighthizer said his office would examine possible counter-measures.

The US dollar's appreciation pushed the EUR/USD 0.2% lower. The GBP lost 0.4% against the EUR.

Economic growth in the USA in Q2 decelerated to 2.1% annualized, yet this rate surpasses analysts' forecast of 1.9%.

Today France will publish the first estimate on Q2 GDP, the European Commission's economic sentiment index is due out, and data on Europe's housing market will see the light of day.
