Summary

- Wednesday's trading was fairly bright on global stock markets
- The US dollar appreciated against emerging market currencies
- The Brent upped more than 1,5% yesterday
- Turkey may be already in recession, an analysis by Capital Economics found
- Argentina requested IMF bailout

Wednesday's trading was fairly bright on global stock markets. In America, the S&P500 gained 0.6%, and the NASDAQ100 rallied 1.2% yesterday. US indices hit new highs on Wednesday. The technology and energy sectors excelled, while the financial and real property sectors underperformed in yesterday's session.

In Europe, the DAX and the CAC40 upped 0.3% each, while the FTSE100 slipped 0.7%. Despite the benign global sentiment, the CEE region closed mixed, with Warsaw's WIG20 slipping 0.4%, and Budapest's BUX rising 1.1%.

This morning in Asia, Japan's Nikkei edged 0.1% higher while China's SSEC slipped 1%.

The currency market was less optimistic than equity markets. The EUR/USD flat-lined but the dollar gained 0.4% from the yen. Emerging market currencies did not do well yesterday: the forint weakened 0.7%, the Turkish lira slid 2.6%, and South Africa's rand (ZAR) lost 1.3%. Elsewhere, the pound weakened versus the US dollar and the EUR yesterday.

The Brent climbed 1.6% higher while precious metals moved mixed: gold barely changed but silver dropped 0.5%.

Turkey's economy is already showing signs of slowing, largely because of the accelerating inflation and the increasingly tight financial conditions, an analysis by Capital Economics concluded. Moreover, the monthly indicators of industrial production, imports and vehicles sales all point to a downturn, as did the most recent consumer confidence index. Analysts at Capital Economics forecast 2-4% growth for this year, because of the strong first half-year, but project a fall in quarter-on-quarter terms in the second half-year of 2018, to be followed by stagnation in 2019.

A research by the OECD concludes that the foreign trade of G20 countries contracted in the second quarter, with exports shrinking by 0.6% and imports falling 0.9%. One reason for the slide is that these countries' currencies have depreciated against the US dollar.

It is expected that Canada will also reach an agreement on reviewing NAFTA (North American Free Trade Agreement) in three days' time. Previously, President Trump warned that a failure to sign an agreement with Canada would not cancel the treaty with Mexico, in which case the protective tariffs against Canada would be imposed. The latest reports reveal that the agreement with Mexico came with the latter's voluntary capping of exports (at 2.4 million cars). If Mexico exceeds this car export limit, the USA will be entitled to levy 25% tariff on vehicles.

Argentina asked the early release of USD 50 billion loan from the IMF. The Argentine peso has lost more than 40% of its value against the US dollar year to date, inflation is at high level, and without the IMF's help the country would be struggling to repay the USD 25 billion debt that matures next year.
