Summary

- Stock markets ended in the green on both sides of the Atlantic
- The SEC filed a lawsuit against Elon Musk; Tesla's share price fell 10% after trading hours
- Italy's governing parties raised the 2019 deficit target to 2.4% of GDP
- The US dollar firmed against the euro

Benefiting from encouraging macroeconomic statistics, US stock markets ground higher on Thursday, one day after the Fed's interest rate hike. The Dow advanced 0.2%, the S&P500 rose by 0.3%, and the Nasdaq closed 0.9% higher yesterday. Europe's indices made modest gains as fears about Italy's budget soured investor sentiment. The Stoxx600 and the DAX added 0.4% each, while Milan's FTSE MIB lost 0.6%.

The US Securities and Exchange Commission filed a lawsuit, accusing Tesla's head of fraud. At this point the complaint takes mention of Elon Musk as defendant, but the SEC is likely to sue Tesla as well later on. Back in early August, Mr Musk posted tweet on a plan that would involve delisting the company, at 420 USD/share but later he backed down. The SEC maintains that the CEO and shareholder's conduct violated the Exchange Act. The news sent Tesla's share price 10% down in after-hours trading.

The Vereinigung Cockpit trade union said that German pilots join Ryanair's one-day strike on Friday in a number of countries. The Irish budget airline had to cancel 250 flights. On Wednesday European Employment Commissioner Marianne Thyssen urged Ryanair's head to move staff to local employment contracts, i.e. in the countries where employees live. Currently, the majority of Ryanair's workforce is employed in Ireland, where labour market regulations are looser. Despite the imminent strike, Ryanair's share price climbed 0.4% higher yesterday.

Italy's populist governing parties have agreed on the 2019 budget, which comes with a deficit target of 2.4% of GDP. Thus the government is defying its own Finance Minister who had wanted to cap the deficit at 1.6%. The approved deficit target also means that Italy's public debt will expand, rather than shrink in 2019. This is likely to add to the conflicts between Italy and the EU.

The US dollar's firming pushed the EUR/USD 0.86% lower.

Today Germany's government holds a summit, involving ministers and the automotive industry's representatives, to discuss the future of diesel cars. Parties have until the end of September to find a solution how to avoid bans on diesel cars. Government officials agree that banning diesel cars from cities should be staved off, and that buyers' confidence in German carmakers shall be reinstated. But if the car industry needs to finance retrofitting these cars, that would impose EUR 18 billion extra burden for the industry. Reportedly, Volkswagen is prepared to assume part of the costs. The company will help drivers who are prepared to retrofit their vehicles, and it will also launch a car swap programme that would replace the cars failed in the scandal to cleaner ones. But Volkswagen is prepared to cover only 80% of the cost of mounting catalytic converters and it is unwilling to buy back the cars with 'cheating' diesel engines.

The eurozone's September inflation statistics and US personal income and spending data for August are due out today. Elsewhere, China will release purchasing managers' indices for September on Sunday.
