Summary

- Stock markets fell as the sentiment changed quickly.
- The clock is ticking on Brexit negotiations, Europe's carmakers warn
- The Fed is committed to continue the tightening, the minutes of the latest meeting reveal.

The sentiment on advanced economies' equity markets reversed on Wednesday, when the benchmark indices closed down on both sides of the Atlantic. Erasing the day's 0.7% gain by the close, the Stoxx600 ended 0.4% in the red. In Europe, the losers of the day came from the automotive industry (BMW and Daimler fell 1% each, while Volkswagen reversed 0.3%), as vehicle sales fell sharply in September. This made Goldman Sachs expect that auto parts suppliers' results would deteriorate, as the European Automobile Manufacturers' Association warned of the possible negative implications of a hard Brexit on Europe's car manufacturing systems. The worst-performing individual name was German private health care company Fresenius, which nose-dived 16% after reporting shrinking profit and cutting its income outlook for this year. By contrast, Europe's tech sector excelled: investors appreciated the ASML (+3.5%) chipmaker's better-than-expected earnings, which benefited STMicroelectronics (+0.8%) as well.

The EU summit and the United Kingdom are in the focus of attention worldwide. It is reported that Prime Minister Theresa May is prepared to extend the interim period, while former PMs would prefer to request more time from the EU, for a new Brexit referendum. What makes a no-deal Brexit more likely is that Donald Tusk, the President of the European Council said on Tuesday that there was no cause for optimism regarding the agreement. The FTSE and the pound lost 0.5% yesterday, to which the better-than-expected inflation figure also contributed. A no-deal Brexit could cause significant swings on the pound's exchange rate, market players say. The euro also depreciated yesterday: the EUR/USD sank 0.6%, nearing 1.15. Italy's benchmark, the FTSE-MIB fell 1.3%. Some measures in Italy's budget draft may lead to a ballooning deficit and conflicts with the EU. The whole draft shall be forwarded to the Parliament by Saturday, and legislators have until the end of this year to approve it.

America's stock indices closed mixed: the Dow slipped 0.4%, while the S&P and the Nasdaq100 inched down a few basis points on Wednesday. The financial, health care, and telecom sectors' gains were almost entirely offset by other sectors' losses. Corporate earnings reports were in the focus on Wednesday. Netflix, which released its figures after market hours, grew by 5% yesterday, while IBM's discouraging quarterly figures dragged down the share price by 8%. UAL's stock price jumped nearly 6%, even though its quarterly figures missed analysts' forecasts but it raised its profit forecast for this year. The worse-than-expected housing statistics weighed on Home Depot's share price, which dropped 4%. The energy sector did not do well; the WTI fell by 3%, to less than 70 USD/barrel. The minutes of the Fed's latest meeting, published yesterday, revealed that decision-makers were committed to further interest rate hikes, which left its mark on the sentiment. The 10Y bond yields rose by for basis points, to a seven-year high.

Asia's stock indices were seen in the red ahead of the close this morning. The Shanghai Composite fell 2%, the Hang Seng shed 0.4%, and the Nikkei slipped 0.8%. The yuan fell to its lowest this year.

Today the UK will release the September reading of retail sales statistics, and the USA will publish the CB Leading index. In Europe, the quarterly reports of Nestlé, SAP and Novartis may be of interest. Hungary's ÁKK will issue 1Y and 5Y bonds in today's auction.
